Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan (1888-1975)

Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan was a distinguished philosopher, scholar, and India's second President. A firm believer that education must develop intellect and character together, he regarded teachers as the true builders of the nation. Before entering politics, he taught at prestigious universities and was admired for his humility and wisdom.

His thoughts on ethics, culture, and spirituality continue to guide generations. To honour his lifelong service to education, his birthday, 5th September, is celebrated as Teachers' Day across India, inspiring gratitude and respect for all educators.

Chanakya
(c. 350-283 BCE)

Chanakya, also known as Kautilya or Vishnugupta, was a brilliant teacher, philosopher, and economist of ancient India. He authored the Arthashastra, a masterpiece on politics, governance, and statecraft. Through his sharp intellect and strategic guidance, he helped Chandragupta Maurya establish the Mauryan Empire. Chanakya believed that education must create wise and disciplined citizens who can lead with courage and integrity. His timeless lessons on leadership, foresight, and responsibility remain relevant even today, proving that true wisdom lies in patience, knowledge, and purposeful action.

Savitribai Phule
(1831-1897)

Savitribai Phule was India's first female teacher and a courageous social reformer who fought against gender and caste discrimination. Along with her husband, Jyotiba Phule, she established the first school for girls in 1848 in Pune. Despite facing ridicule and threats, she continued teaching with determination and dignity. Savitribai dedicated her life to the upliftment of women, widows, and marginalized communities. Her efforts laid the foundation for women's education in India. She remains an enduring symbol of courage, equality, empowerment, and the transformative power of education.

Maulana Abul Kalam Azad (1888-1958)

Maulana Abul Kalam Azad (1888-1958) was a renowned freedom fighter, visionary educationist, and one of India's most respected national leaders. A gifted scholar and writer, he inspired people through his powerful journals like Al-Hilal and Al-Balagh, spreading the message of nationalism and unity. He actively participated in major movements like Non-Cooperation and Quit India and worked tirelessly for Hindu-Muslim harmony. As the first Education Minister of independent India, he laid the foundation of modern education by establishing institutions such as the UGC and strengthening IITs and universities. His birthday, 11 November, is celebrated as National Education Day, honoring his immense contribution to knowledge, nation-building, and inclusive education.

Bhaskaracharya
(1114-1185 CE)

Bhaskaracharya, also known as Bhaskara II (1114-1185 CE), was not only a brilliant mathematician and astronomer but also an extraordinary teacher. Through his works like Lilavati (arithmetic) and Bijaganita (algebra), he taught complex mathematical and astronomical concepts in a simple and engaging way. His books were filled with examples, problems, and explanations designed to help students learn by practice and reasoning. Even without holding a formal teaching position, Bhaskara's writings served as educational guides for generations, making him a teacher whose lessons transcended time and inspired scholars across India and beyond.

Rabindranath Tagore
(1861-1941)

Rabindranath Tagore, a Nobel Laureate poet, philosopher, and educationist, redefined learning through his vision of holistic education. He founded Visva-Bharati University at Shantiniketan, where students learned amidst nature with freedom and creativity. Tagore believed that education should nurture the soul, not just fill the mind with facts. His literary works and educational ideas emphasized harmony between humanity and nature. He encouraged imagination, self-expression, and compassion as true measures of learning. His philosophy continues to inspire modern education systems across the world with its beauty and depth.
